I had an error that kept coming back, the problem was with the "Windows\System32\drivers\mscomctl.sys", I copied it to the main directory from the OMSI main directory, and the program runs well. If you're having trouble with the "mscomctl.sys", open it up in a text editor, search for "USBSTOR.HID" and make sure that those lines are commented out. (if they are, uncomment and save it). This would also be a good place to test/compare the performance of this driver to another one. Another thing that you might try is a hex edit of the program, either manually or in the program itself, on the line that is set to read

'USBSTOR.HID.DevicePath=???'. That being said, how did you install the keyboard (ie: was it a driver, a soft key, a hotkey combination, etc)? I found a tutorial (that I cant locate now) where it mentioned to put a file in 'drivers\usbstor.sys' (Sidenote: The driver is now in 'drivers\usbstor.vxd' which was added by the OS as part of the USB driver set. Before this change, it was in 'drivers\usbstor.sys' -- but I couldn't find a work around to replace the file without installing an OS update). This may not be an actual problem, but I would like to see if this is the source of the problem. I just installed the OS and OMSI and I don't have any of these issues. My keyboard works fine. I was having the same issues as the people in this thread... the video card would not load... Anyway I got it to load the video card by using the keyboard instead of the mouse. I had this problem because when I first started up OMSI the cursor would not come up (I am using a mouse)... I had to hit the space bar on the keyboard to start the video card. I also had to go into BIOS and disable any Autostart option for the computer that was trying to start the video card (it was set to start when the computer booted). I figured this out by observing the order of bootup in the system logs that were written into the OMSI installation folder. If you have these problems with 82157476af
